Épreuve d'anglais LV1

I. Text comprehension (8 points)

'Uncle, please forgive me. I will try to pass my exam next time, ' cried Guinea Jo when his uncle applied the long thick cane on his bare back and buttocks.

As if Uncle Imam suspected what had happened, he bellowed angrily, 'Passing your exam next time is not the point. You must tell me how you failed your school leaving examination. '

Guinea Jo: Dada Awuru caused it.

Uncle Imam: Do you mean the traditional doctor near Ketu village on the way to my farm ?

Guinea Jo: Yes, uncle. His medicine let me down in the examination hall.

Uncle Imam applied the cane once more and shouted, 'You are a liar. You must tell me the whole truth'.

Guinea Jo : Uncle, I am telling the truth. Six months before our school leaving examination I heard about Dada Awuru. He was reputed to be a powerful juju man and in a position to help ambitious students pass their exams without reading their books at all. I went to consult Awuru, who boasted that I would easily pass my exam with a juju handkerchief. He told me that if I used the hanky(1) to wipe my face, my eyes would be opened spiritually and I would just copy out the answers to all questions. I saved my transport and pocket money for some months to buy a juju hanky. I did not bother to read my books any more throughout the five months preceding the examination.

Uncle Imam: What happened at the examination hall ?

Guinea Jo: When I applied my hanky three times with incantations as directed by Dada Awuru, the questions remained on the papers given to me by the examiner and I became very nervous sweating all over my body!

Uncle Imam: You are a foolish lazy boy. Juju cannot help you pass exam . You have to study hard day and night. Dada Awuru duped you for nothing. Anyway, you' ve learnt your lesson.

Note : (1) a hank (or handherchief): un mouchoir.
